Dear Mrs Tan,

throughout the year, our class has been to many learning journeys in different places around Singapore. We have had alot of fun and memories, and also learnt alot from the learning journeys. The most memoric learning Journey to me was our trip to Chinatown.

At In Chinatown, I learnt about the contributions of our forefathers in building Singapore, transforming Singapore from a small harbor, to the current Singapore with bustling industry, and one of the cleanest and richest countries in the world. Without them, there would have never been a Singapore today, so I count myself lucky, and greatly appreciate their efforts and sacrifices they have put in. We went to the Chinatown Heritage Centre, where we got to know how Chinatown was like in the past. In the past, Chinatown was filled with rickshaw pullers, and there were not as many cars and buses as in the past. Instead, roads were filled with people. Tall buildings also never existed, and Chinatown used to have many "five-foot pathways" which are filled with small shops, from fortune telling, letter reading and writing, barbers to shoes polishers, and so on. However, these shops no longer exist, even though some of the "five-foot ways" can still be found in Chinatown.

I enjoyed the moment when some uncles, who were my friendly taught us the art of traditional Chinese tea brewing. As I have never learnt how to brew tea before, it was a great learning experience for me. Now, I can even brew tea for my family. Afterwards, the uncle taught us some basic Tai Chi moves. They explained that it was a great way of self-defence in the past.

I learnt that there are many different ethnic groups and religions that exist in Singapore, such as Taoism, Hinduism, Christianity and so on. This is because Singapore has been able to preserve and maintain harmony and respect between different ethnic groups. In fact, people from specific ethnic groups are also learning basic practices of other ethnic groups ~~and~~ for greater understanding, respect, and to avoid any unintended offences between people of different ethnic groups.

The learning Journeys that the school has organized are beneficial to me and I am able to learn many things outside school curriculum.

Yours sincerely
Benjamin Wang.
